- The Gospel of Luke, written by the co-laborer and travel companion of the apostle Paul, was penned around 30 to 60 years following the life of Christ.
- At the very beginning of his Messianic biography, he tells his readers that the information provided was collected in a variety of ways. One of those was through his conversations with eyewitnesses.
- I wonder if Luke actually got to meet Mary and if she was his source regarding Jesus' trip to Jerusalem?
